Liebe Lena,

wie geht es dir? Hoffentlich hast du nicht zu viel Arbeit...

Vielleicht hättest du Lust, zur Entspannung einmal eine Woche bei mir in Straßburg zu verbringen? Dann könnten wir uns endlich richtig kennenlernen! Ich würde dir so gern die Stadt zeigen, mit dir auf den Münsterturm steigen und mit einem kleinen Bähnchen eine Stadtrundfahrt machen, das ist lustig und auch interessant, denn in Straßburg gibt es viel zu sehen. Du musst auch unbedingt unsere Spezialitäten kosten! Die elsässische Küche ist nämlich hervorragend.

Bei mir zu Hause gibt es ein Gästezimmer, so dass du dich auch mal zurückziehen kannst, wenn du möchtest.

Es würde mich sehr freuen, wenn du kommen würdest, vielleicht so um Ostern herum? Was meinst du?

Herzliche Grüße

Marine

Read carefully this interview with writer E.B. White.

INTERVIEWER: Can you say something about your childhood in Mount Vernon?

E.B. WHITE: As a child, I was frightened but not unhappy. My parents were loving and kind. We were a large family (six children). Nobody ever came to dinner. My father was formal, conservative, successful, hardworking, and worried. My mother was loving and hardworking. We lived in a large house in a suburb. I lacked for nothing except confidence. I suffered from the routine terrors of childhood: fear of the dark, fear of the future, fear of the return to school after summer.... I was, as a child, allergic to pollens and dusts, and still am.

INTERVIEWER: At what age did you know you were going to follow a literary profession? Was there a particular incident, or moment?

WHITE: I never knew for sure that I would follow a literary profession. I was twenty-seven or twenty-eight before anything happened that gave me any assurance that I could be a writer. I had done a great deal of writing, but I lacked confidence in my abilities.

INTERVIEWER: When did you first move to New York?

WHITE: After I got out of college, in 1921, I went to work in New York but did not live in New York. I lived at home, with my father and mother in Mount Vernon. I held three jobs in about seven months. I disliked them all. In the spring of 1922 I headed west to seek my fortune. I landed in Seattle six months later and worked there as a reporter on the Times for a year, was fired, shipped to Alaska, and then returned to New York.

INTERVIEWER: Nature has been very important to you. This seems a contradiction considering the urbanity of New York.

WHITE: There is no contradiction. New York is part of the natural world. I love the city, I love the country. The city is part of the country. But it is not just a question of birds and animals. The urban scene is a spectacle that fascinates me. People are animals, and the city is full of people in strange plumage, defending their territorial rights, digging for their supper.

INTERVIEWER: Do you have a special interest in the other arts than writing?

WHITE: I have no special interest in any of the other arts. I know nothing of music or of painting or of sculpture or of the dance. I would rather watch the circus or a ball game than ballet.

INTERVIEWER: Is style something that can be taught?

WHITE: I don't think it can be taught. Style results more from what a person is than from what he knows.

A journey into genius

by Dan Savery Paz, Lonely Planet Writer

Want to enter the world of a genius? Visiting the homes and workplaces of Marie Curie, Shakespeare and Einstein may not make you more intelligent, but it will certainly inspire you. Take a trip with us to some of these great places.

Curie's birthplace, Warsaw, Poland

Marie Curie, one of the greatest fighters against cancer, was a proud daughter of Warsaw. She was the first woman to win a Nobel Prize (1903). She discovered two elements— polonium (named after Poland) and radium. She is famous for her research on radioactivity.

Einstein's apartment, Bern, Switzerland

Albert Einstein lived in Bern from 1902 to 1909. These were the happiest and most productive years of his life. 1905 was the year when he wrote four articles that changed modern physics, including the special theory of relativity. These important papers were created in a modest apartment on Kramgasse, which is now the Einstein House, home to his typewriter, telephone and some very well-worn passports.

Shakespeare's Globe, London, UK

What could be more English than standing with a beer in hand, watching a Shakespeare play by the River Thames? Only tea with the Queen. 2016 marks 400 years since the death of William Shakespeare. The Globe Theatre in London will be celebrating with a host of special performances and exhibitions.

Part 2. Written expression (10 points)

Describe a personal experience of visiting a museum, a city, or a place in nature. (minimum 100 words)

I love nature! It offers some of the best experiences when you have a free day from work. Nothing compares to walking in the forest for two or three hours on a sunny day! Let me tell you more about this.

I enjoy walking a lot. I usually like to put on my walking shoes on a sunny day and then walk around the forests which are just next to the village where I live. Walking in the forest is relaxing, first of all. It is also educational, because you can learn more about the flowers, trees and animals that live just next to us. It is also a way to get over problems and stop thinking about stress and daily life issues.

Try it, you won't regret it!
